To insure the Non-Rental Tracking units:

Tracking unit Insurance: as 2019 R17.50 per/vehicle. Pay only for a callout.

IT COVERS: A tracking unit is only warranted for 2 years from new, rather expensive when you pay twice for the price of one if it goes faulty. Defective units could happen, they could blow by jump starting the batteries incorrectly or humidity could cause faulty units also they age and even after an accident it could damage them to become faulty. Also some stand for ever in hot sunny weather year in and year out which obviously hot good for the unit. There is also a time when units reach their working ability; you will notice the tracking becomes sluggish etc.

We have noticed over the years, we had to replace some customer's units. While it's not in there budget plan so that in terms could be a problem, there is nobody to blame. It's when something you can't afford put off for a while. And the driver gets to know then it cost you even more till you back on track. It is recommended to change them every four years if they don't go faulty before then. The battery inside the units is left to be. They have a unpredictable certainty, they can last from 24 months onwards.

The Benefits. The math proves it costs you less than half for a new unit to replace it. Either way the client gains the most. The other benefit is that we will monitor the units on our panel by doing daily check and reports of the ones that seem faulty, and report to the owners if necessary. Removing and installing into another would also work out half the price.

Tracking agreement plan. This only reduces the financial burden and not the actual chances of the unit not breaking. Insurance is just a risk transfer mechanism. If a person is financially stable and plans for unexpected events, they may be able to go without this insurance.

Cover includes when; Units could be damaged due to jumpstarting the vehicles batteries. Signals are lost and disordered or not even in position where it should be in a 10 meters radius. There is a possibility where a unit could be running a vehicles battery down this must be checked by the technician.
